Short course description:	Lithuanians, Poles, Belarusians, Ukrainians, Jews and many other nations coexisted in the Grand Duchy of Lithuania. Five hundred years of common statehood was halted by Russia. National movements that touched almost every nation in the region in the 19th century resulted in nation-states that formed and thrived through the 20th century. How is the legacy of the Grand Duchy of Lithuania being divided today? How and why is history teaching different in the schools of neighboring states? Looking from this perspective, what is the context of contemporary propaganda wars and geopolitics tensions? Where are boundaries between national narratives and critical history, between story and science?
Course content:	Claims of Belarus and Lithuania to the legacy of the Grand Duchy of Lithuania Ancient Lithuania as a cradle of Polish culture and Lithuanian “response” Holocaust and Jewish history in Lithuania: conflicts and/or interpretations?
